

Libraries Achieve Great Access Deal

Libraries across the country have come together for the first-time to negotiate a bulk purchase price to buy electronic information that generally only bigger public or tertiary libraries could afford. From March 4 this year, the deal allows anyone to access thousands of online magazines, journals and databases through their local library. Until now this kind of access was only available to paid subscribers.

This access will also be available to every primary through secondary school at no cost for the first year as the MoE has paid schools' membership to the libraries' purchasing group.

"This initiative demonstrates the commitment of librarians to deliver the broadest range of information possible to their communities – however isolated or small," Library and Information Association of New Zealand Aotearoa (LIANZA) president Mirla Edmundson said.

The resources, provided by vendors Gale and EBSCO, will allow library users to read the full texts of popular magazines such as Metro or North & South, thousands of academic and medical journals, reference books, historical documents, biographies, maps, photos and graphics as well as a range of reference databases including one providing comparative data on international companies and another offering the latest opposing viewpoints on international hot topics. It will also hold resources specifically compiled for school students.

Some really good news for home educators is that library users will be able to access the resources from home or work through the local library websites! They can also just pop down to their local participating library.

(NZPA, "Library deal gives free online access to journals, magazines", 15 January 2004, <http://www.stuff.co.nz/stuff/0,2106,2783924a10,00.html>)

Continued Growth

The numbers of people taking up the home education option is growing, yet only a much smaller number stick with it for the long haul.

Home educated students in NZ with exemptions numbered 5877 in 2000, 5976 in 2001, 6173 in 2002 and 6437 in 2003 (as at July 1 each year; see Figure 1). The annual growth rates were 1.7%, 3.3% and 4.3% respectively; the overall growth rate for those three years was 9.5%. The line on Figure 1 shows that the overall growth rate trend has been to slow down. It is also seen in the overall rates of growth for selected blocks of time. For the 13 years from 1990 to 2003 growth was 335.2%; for the 10 years from 1993 to 2003 it was 104.9%; and for the five years from 1998 to 2003 it was 22.1%.

It has been over two years since the MoE last released official statistics in relation to home education in this country. Their numbers and graphs can be viewed at: <http://tinyurl.com/za0z>.

A = No. of HE students starting
 B = No. of HE students stopping
 C = Difference
 D = %'age of starters retained

Year	A	B	C	D
2000	1535	1109	426	27.8
2001	1304	1205	99	7.6
2002	1411	1214	197	14.0
2003	1435	1171	264	18.4

There were 1435 students who started home education in the year to 30 June 2003, but 1171 who stopped, leaving a net gain of only 264. This large turnover has been characteristic of home education over the years (see Table 1).

Figure 2 shows the numbers of students in each age group who started in home education in the 12 months up to 30 June 2003. It reveals that the largest number were six-year-olds, 533 of them or 37% of the total. Figure 3 shows that the largest numbers cease home education before they've reached the three year mark: 237 stopping after one year and 154 after two years. In addition, there were 193 who stopped before they even did one full year.

The question we always ask is why do they stop so soon? Since other MoE statistics show that only 51 of those who quit in the year to 30 June 2003 were six-year-olds, and only 66 of them were seven-year-olds, a total of 117 (out of a total of 193 who stopped so soon), we can see that the reasons are not particularly age-related. In fact, the total number stopping before three years were up, 584, is more than all the home educated children aged six through 12 who stopped that year, which numbered 560. Looking at different age brackets, there were 544 aged from 12 through 16 who gave up that year. So stopping within the first three years is a characteristic one can find spread across the entire age range.

Schools, Min of Health & FPA Gang up on Students

Public Health — Sexual Health Service (of MidCentral Health) was invited to provide a sexuality information and advice stand as part of a planned school and community health day, held on 18 September 2003 at Manawatu College in Foxton. Members of the wider community who also had stands there said virtually no one from the public attended the day, but the clientele consisted almost exclusively of Manawatu College students aged 13 and up.

The most popular stand was the Sexual Health Service one for it had free “tutu paks” to give away, Sexual Health W.O.F. quizzes and a couple of wooden models of an erect penis onto which the 13-year-olds could practice fitting condoms.

The editor thought he’d enquire a bit further, and after a couple of letters got a response from MidCentral Health, but as yet there has been no response from Manawatu College Principal or its Trust Board.

The Sexual Health W.O.F. has six written questions and six oral questions. The written questions: 1) 3 tips for successful condom use are: 2) How can you tell when someone is gay? 3) How do you know when you have a sexually transmitted infection? 4) Why is it bad to use oil-based lubricants with condoms? 5) Two tips for successful contraceptive pill use are: 6) Does using two condoms make it safer? The oral questions: 1) How drunk is “too drunk” to have sex? 2) What is masturbation? 3) How do you tell when someone wants you to kiss them? 4) what is the best reason not to have sex? 5) It is not necessary to have your parents consent to obtain contraception if you are under 16 years of age? 6) What is a dental dam (safer sex or latex dam)? [Grammar and typo errors in the above are exactly as received from MidCentral Health.]

The “tutu pak” came with two condoms and a sachet of lubricating gel. A wee booklet had 18 pages of advice. “What’s the difference between a friendship and a relationship?” For most of us, a friend is a person you can trust, be honest with, share interests and you respect and can rely on. A relationship has all these things with the added feelings of sexual attraction between you and the other person.” [Watch out how you use the word “relationship” in the future....teens are taught that it carries sexual connotations.]

“Is it okay to be attracted to someone of the same sex?” It is natural for young people to have feelings for someone of the same sex. It may or may not mean you are gay/lesbian/bisexual. Being attracted to people who are the same sex as you is really okay. It doesn’t in any way change who you are. It doesn’t matter who you are attracted to, or have relationships with or what label you put on it.” Think of the implications here: no restrictions are stated or implied...nor were any found in the whole booklet as to age or kinship or moral considerations. The only restriction was to seek mutual consent.

“When is it the right time to have sex?” This would be a mutual decision by both you and the other person. Issues that are important include:

- It is good to know limits before things happen
- Know what you want and how far you really want to go
- You are confident enough to talk about what you want with your partner
- Know what your limits are
- Not being pressured
- Feeling safe
- Being turned on enough
- Trusting the person
- Using contraception and condoms
- Being sure you want to share yourself with the other person

Only you can decide when the time is right for a positive and safe sexual experience. Many young people say they wish they had waited. If you are unsure, WAIT.” [Notice that this list is totally self-centred, as if each person was totally and utterly autonomous, with no relation or responsibility to anyone beyond self. But even then it is sorely lacking. Look also at what has been left off this list of “important issues”: legal issues such as age; moral issues such as “is this right or wrong?”; social issues such as what all other family members would want including your future spouse; eternal issues such as how this would affect your spiritual health.]

“What is Safer Sex?” Safer Sex is the way to reduce the risk of pregnancy and catching STIs. Try having ourtercourse. It’s all the rage!”

“What is ourtercourse?” Ourtercourse is cuddling, rubbing, fondling, licking, kissing, massaging, mutual masturbation, without vaginal or anal penetration.” [This is what the Ministry of Health is telling the nation’s 13-year-olds is “all the rage”. If your home educated children mix much with school kids, guess what the hot topics of conversation will include?]

Six websites are given for further information. The Family Planning Association’s, Sexfiles, The word and two for Urge. Sexfiles’ first two FAQs under “Abortion” are, “How much does an abortion cost in NZ?” and “How soon after an abortion can you have sex?” It is interesting how they communicate their sense of priorities, isn’t it? “The word” is all about sex and sexuality with an incredibly detailed Q & A section on incest and other perversions. A sample Q from the section “sex stuff”: “When you’re with a girl, what’s the best way to make her horny?” That depends on the girl. Different people like different things. As you get to know your partner you start to work out what they like and don’t like. You could always ask. This is a quick, sure fire way of getting it right. Good sex is based on good communication. Go with what you know and gauge the girl’s reaction. If you’re confident and relaxed you might not have to do too much at all. Good luck.” This lovely bit of advice and the wish for “good luck” comes to you from the Family Planning Association who runs this website, funded by your taxes.

The Urge website is a bit less focused on sex with info on work, careers, stress, drugs, the law, eating and exercise. The website’s full glossary for the letter A is: abortion, abstinence, abuse, acid, acne, activism, addiction, AIDS, anal intercourse, anorexia, anus, amphetamines, amyl nitrate. The emphasis is still clear: sex and drugs. Even with the sections on law, stress and work, there are no glossary words for arbitration, advocacy, apprenticeships, anger management, anti-social or aggression.

Reading through these websites is sickening. The amoral “anything goes” approach and perverted nature of much of the material draws readers into it, as anyone familiar with human nature would readily predict. It drags one’s sights down; it does not lift them up. Healthy children should avoid these sites like the plague; children already confused about sexual and drug matters will be only further confused and given even more weird things to ponder.

In the editor’s letter to MidCentral Health, he asked if it was even legal to be handing out condoms to 13-year-olds. The letter, signed by both Jan Guppy and Belinda Rodgers, said the following:

Legality of young people accessing condoms: In referring to the Family Planning Association reference “Sexuality and The Law”, Dec 2002, point 6.3: “It is legal to freely distribute or sell condoms and or lubricant to people of any age.”

Sexuality Education: The sexuality programme delivered [at the stall at Manawatu College] supports the Health and Physical Education in the NZ curriculum. Ministry of Education 1999.

Again, the implications are rather disturbing. Pedophiles, let alone FPA staff, cannot get into trouble giving these things to little kiddies. Three things cause this writer to think pedophilia is in line to be decriminalised. First, the legal logic forbidding any kind of consensual act has already been destroyed by the decriminalisation of homosexual acts and prostitution. (This is also true for polygamy, polyandry, bestiality, etc.) Second, this present Labour government has clearly demonstrated its commitment to engineering society’s foundational concepts into their version of utopia. Third, the move to granting greater autonomous freedoms, so-called “rights”, to younger and younger children is being pushed by MP Steve Maharey in particular as he uses the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCROC) to pry children loose from whatever moorings they have in their families, leaving them “free” to be cast about by every special-interest wind and wave on life’s high seas, including consensual pedophilia.

Some would call this institutionalised child abuse, forcing immature youngsters to make their own decisions about things, the implications of which they could not possibly comprehend.

Happily our children educated at home outside this system will be spared most of this. But sadly they may not be spared the second-hand reviewing of it all from their school-attending friends. And all children are at so much more risk now with all these doors to perversion not only standing wide open but also being promoted by high profile organisations and government departments funded by our tax dollars.

Conspiracy of Oppression?

During 2003 The Waikato District Health Board spent $300,000 to set up 18 medical clinics among its poorer secondary schools. The idea is for the clinics to offer free medical treatment, according to Pinnacle Health clinic team manager Erica Amon, to adolescents who would normally not see a general practitioner. Once free services like this are established – at school for maximum convenience – you can be sure these adolescents won’t be visiting a G.P. – why should they?

Trial clinics at Melville High School, Fairfield High School, and Hamilton’s Fraser High School showed students were seeking treatment mainly for contraception, sexual health and mental health issues such as depression and eating disorders, Ms Amon said. Already clinics are at Te Kuiti High School, Paeroa College, Ngaruawahia High School, Huntly College, and Hauraki Plains College. Teenagers in these areas now have even less reason or incentive to take their problems to their parents or whanau: the state schools are gradually taking up every form of care and all within an environment which lacks any kind of accountability nor encourages any kind of responsibility, two character traits generally regarded as essential to help youngsters from poorer disadvantaged backgrounds to advance themselves.

This is all part of the Health Ministry’s Youth Action Plan in response to an increased abortion rate among females aged 15 to 19 of 62%. Rather than helping youngsters make lifestyle changes that will improve overall health and keep them out of trouble, the clinics are taken to the schools so that, according to the Waikato Times article¹, “students overcame concerns about making an appointment, getting time off school and privacy.” Incidentally, Pinnacle Health gets $15 for every student it sees. One could be excused for pointing out the obvious: the incentive of the clinic is not to reduce youth problems but to perpetuate them.

Left-wing feminists and neo-marxists have made convincing arguments of how “the system” conspires to keep the disadvantaged (almost always identified as female and Maori/P.I.) in their places by government schooling and social policies. Yet here is a left-wing government practising the very hegemony of oppression the feminists and neo-marxists condemn!

A Brief History of Home Education in New Zealand, Part 6 (Final)

The Home Education Foundation was contacted in early 1999 by Bill and Diana Waring of Spearfish, South Dakota, who are also well-established veterans on the US Home School Convention circuit. They and their teenaged youngsters, Isaac, Michael and Melody, were coming out to do a YWAM course in Auckland for several months over the 1999-2000 millennium change and wondered if they could speak to some home educators while here. They ended up doing a two-part tour of about 10 weeks' duration of Northland and Auckland before the new millennium and then of the rest of the country afterwards. They got as far north as Paihia and down south they even spent time on Stewart Island. It was a grueling tour, but they met the pace with grace and a desire to keep on giving of their wisdom and experiences. And New Zealanders up and down the country opened their homes to them night after night, in some cases using the tour as the catalyst for a first-ever gathering of local home educators. These speakers who are used to standing in front of crowds of 10,000 home educators in Orlando, Florida, shared a lounge suite and sat on the floor with five parents in Moerewa, Northland, and stood almost ignored in an Otago church hall as local home educators made contact with each other for the first time! Their final talk, on April 1, 2000, was on the North Shore to a crowd of nearly 300 home educating parents, possibly the largest gathering of this kind ever in NZ. The tour did a lot to draw NZ Home Educators together and endeared NZ so indelibly to the Warings, that they are back here again over January and February 2004.

On the 4th of April 2000, a number of people from different Home Education Organisations (National Council of Home Educators of NZ, Auckland Home Educators and the Home Education Foundation) met with the Minister of Education, Trevor Mallard, and later with Alliance MP Liz Gordon. Part of the purpose was to let the MoE know that there were several organisations in NZ to look after the interests of home educators and that no one could ever hope to speak for all of us. Liz Gordon's advice and commitment to special needs children was very refreshing: indeed, she later helped a special-needs home educator get entitlements the local school wouldn't give.

Then in mid-2000 the Minister of Education called for a Ministerial Working Party on Home Schooling. The letter advising us of this had the following items (among others): The Minister would not let the Working Party be captured by any person or any organization; WP membership needed to reflect the diversity of home schooling; Four national organizations – Home Educators Network of Aotearoa (HENA), National Council of Home Educators of NZ (NCHENZ), the Home Schooling Federation and the Home Education Foundation (HEF) – would each be invited to nominate two people for six places on the WP; issues for discussion would include: supervisory allowance, Special Ed 2000, access to Qualifications, access to professional guidance, professional development of parents and accountability issues with both MoE and ERO.

The Working Party never eventuated because the Federation refused to sit at the same table as representatives of HEF, NCHENZ and HENA. In fact an officer of the Federation circulated letters very widely, including to the MoE, in which the integrity of the MoE was denigrated and called into question. One letter also libeled Craig Smith to such an extent that Craig's lawyer said his future financial security had just been assured should he care to pursue it (which he did not).

Politically things have gone rather quiet since then. The MoE has been stretched to the limit with the transition from the old School Certificate/Sixth Form Certificate/Bursary regime to the NCEA levels 1, 2 and 3. This occupied all of 2001 through 2003. HENA merged with AHE, and the team there has been busy helping enquirers get accurate and balanced information about the home education option. The Federation and NCHENZ have both gone quiet. Canterbury Home Educators have been working with the MoE for a while now hoping to review and streamline the exemption process. There have been seminars and workshops put on by a large number of local support groups all over the country. Home Educators have become very good at organizing their own Professional Development.

HEF organized a World Views conference for home educators to which many others came besides. A world authority in this area, Dr David Noebel (author of Understanding the Times), and Chuck Edwards of Summit Ministries in Colorado Springs came over and revolutionized many people's thinking for those few days in April 2002. Trustees of HEF who were traveling to the USA in 2001 and again in 2003, made personal contact with some significant people in the home education movement there: Pat & Sue Welch of The Teaching Home magazine, Jonathan Lindvall of Bold Christian Living, Susan Beatty and Philip Troutt of the California Parent Educator magazine, Bob & Linda Schneider of Rainbow Resource Centre, Harvey & Laurie Bluedorn of Teaching the Trivium, Doug & Beall Phillips of Vision Forum, James & Tracy McDonald of Home Schooling Today magazine and also Rev Haruto Yoshii of Christian Home Schoolers of Japan!

Home Education continues to grow quietly. Rumbblings in the USA, Australia, parts of Europe and even a few small things here indicate that we home educators may be in for a renewed wave of opposition from bureaucrats. We'll just have to ride it out as we have in the past, the majority of us working well together. We've got history on our side!

Perseverance Ahead of Qualifications

John Wareham is a New Zealander who has created a high-class executive placement service (headhunter if you like), which he runs from New York. When looking for staff, he says, choose for perseverance ahead of talent and education. Better to have someone who is determined than a guy with a string of letters after his name.
